Personal Narrative

I have had a wonderful experience living on my own. Right from my young age, I have always been taught to be independent, and recently, I decided to attain this goal by moving out of my parents' house. I realized that this decision was tough for my parents, but they later discovered that I needed my own space. I convinced them that I am mature and I could handle being alone. Markedly, the decision of living independent greatly changes my life and I am grateful about it.

I have had a great experience with this decision because I have learned to program myself. For instance, I have learned to budget my finances wisely. It should be noted that being away from my parents' house means facing every bill. So, this experience has made me more conscious when it comes to the way I spend my money. Besides, I have managed to set saving goals and I have managed to save at least $600 every month.

On the other hand, staying alone has made me realize that everything has a price. Also, I discovered that being independent is costly. Currently, my monthly expenses include rent, food, medication, managing my wardrobe, and transport. Despite those needs, I have acquired the most precious factor: experiencing the freedom I wanted. I remember having curfew when I lived at my parent's home, and now that I stay in my apartment, I can go whenever and wherever I want, and I do not have to answer to anyone. Besides, I have guests for extended periods of time, and I also feel free around my guests.

All along I had plans of having a pet, but my parents denied me as they were zoophobia, but now I have plans to have a pet. Generally, there is a lot that I can do with this freedom. I could decorate my room with everything that is appealing to me and in any style I want. Also, I can choose my own bedtime; the sun rises and sets on my schedule. The most interesting part of staying with my friends is that I can play any kind of music, however loud, whenever I want. I have a lot of time to concentrate on personal goals such as completing school, establishing a business, and starting a family.

In general, I can describe living on my own as a very rewarding experience. Ideally, nothing is better than having your own place. I am in control of my life and held accountable for every decision I make. In addition, the experience I have had living alone has taught me about stepping out of my comfort zone, being responsible, and behaving like a mature person. On the other hand, this is the time I realized the good things that my parents did for me, and I have been appreciative. My parents did a wonderful job of building my character to fit in any situation, and I appreciate their sacrifice.

I believe I am the happiest person at school because of the freedom that I enjoy. I would advise every person, especially young people, to consider stepping out of their comfort zone and exploring the world. I discovered that there is a lot to enjoy outside your parents' home, so fellow youths should look into it and enjoy life while they still can.
